

Various Forms of Communication

Human communication can be classified into two types: verbal and nonverbal. Verbal communication consists of oral and written communication, both of which are natural-language-based. Nonverbal communication consists of sign language (including visual signs and audio signs) and body language (including posture, gesture, facial expression, and eye contact).